Speak to your church or social group about Called to Peace Ministries. Would you pray about 3 or 4 churches or groups you could ask to speak to in the Month of October about Called to Peace Ministries? We say 3-4 because it is likely only 1 or 2 will actually say yes to your request. CTPM will give you talking points and statistics that you can choose to share with your group or church as you seek to share your passion for women who have experienced Coercive Control and Domestic Abuse.

11:53:03 From Brooke Eggen, CTPM Advocate Coordinator : Our hope is that by hearing from you directly your church or group will want to partner with the ministry and join you in turning the tide against abuse.

Brooke will host a Q&A on Saturday 9am PDT September 23th. You can join the Zoom meeting

12:27:51 From Dr. Jessica Evans : Replying to "Same with showing NO..."

Yes, good point. As with so many things, it is helpful to try to find that balance. We don't want to be emotionless and we don't want to be seen as over emotional. We want to maintain our boundaries but also don't want to be seen as uncooperative.

12:28:01 From Michala's iPhone (2) : As a child growing up in dv and in the church spiritual oppression was used so much in justifying the abuse.

12:28:44 From Dr. Jessica Evans : Replying to "I just tried to link..."

Let me check this Peggy. Thank you!

me too :(

12:39:26 From Audrey Whitaker : Replying to "what would happen if..."

would that be a question for the lawyer, to see if they would think the judge would take issue of that or not? if you presented documentation that the child is struggling and you are doing what you think is best for the child since you already tried to work with the father and documented that? Mom tried that and the judge kicked it back to mediation.

I would support her in her decision. I would make sure she knew the possible outcomes and then help her strategize with the decision she wants to make.

12:43:55 From Helenmary : How did it go for those who represented themselves Dr. Debra? One mom was able to show dad's true colors and she was granted sole custody/sole decision-making. Dad was ordered to get a psychological evaluation and therapy before he could see the child unsupervised. He chose to drink instead. Another mom was able to get some things changed in her parenting time agreement. Still ongoing as he filed another motion. 😞

Unfortunately, many DV positions do not require education in Coercive Control before they are hired and may only get a little bit of on the job education.

You can be an affiliated advocate and do that but it wouldn't be a function as a CTPM advocate. We send clients to our advocates and the court would be sending you clients as a GAL.

I have heard of including parameters on this type of thing in plans. Few things to keep in mind...if it ends up being something that applies to both, is she okay with this for herself? Also keep in mind if he doesn't follow this clause in the plan, she will have to go back to court on this and is she going to want to do that/spend the money on this? Just things to think through.
