@cindymorris I had recently sent that interview with Chris Moles and Lelsie Vernick from our Daily Bread to someone counseling a man in this type of circumstance. I think if you search it on YouTube you can find it, it should also be on Leslie's YouTube if you go through her videos.

12:34:15 From Amy : Question: How do you evaluate a man claiming abuse is actually the one being abused rather than the "abuser?" My husband began going to 12 step and divorce care claiming abuse and they just take his story at face value. So he manipulates the leaders in these types of groups. I know there are male victims, I'm just curious how you sort that out to not support a "wolf in sheep's clothing?"

I think you would have to be very careful for this reason. The couple of instances I am aware of is someone having knowing the couple for years, and in one case even someone having lived with the couple too. I think it would be very scary to just take a man's story at face value that you don't know, without giving the wife a chance to share. I would hope as time went, the truth would start to reveal itself. I wouldn't ever want to equip a man and abuser to DARVO his wife. I feel like Chris Moles needs some sort of offshoot to decipher these situations or something!

So going to them for help may be more harmful vs calling police or women's services...Thank The Lord there are now many safe educational support groups that "get it" 💜

12:44:06 From cindymorris : Replying to "Question: How do you..."

@Audrey Whitaker I understand your concern. But I am sure this man is the victim in this case - her family is concocting false charges against him and threatening to have a couple men confront him with handguns ... These are just the extremes, there is a lot more evidence. I think the best thing to do is ask God to reveal the truth and watch carefully.

that's good. I have someone in my life I am concerned about, and while he does not have fear as a woman might, being in a power under position, there is a general emotional, mental beat down and trying to keep the peace and keep her happy, or face the fall out. I think he needs to shift from hoping she will listen to someone, anyone, to getting counseling support himself so he can respond correctly and have his own boundaries of what he will and wont' engage in.
